ENUMERATIONS 1-6

1. First lineS Frank O'Hara

Sitting in a corner of the gallery, smiling
through my own memories
of painful excitement, your wide eyes so. He has a funnel instead of a penis. So many echoes in my head, so many things in the air! Soot, so that the pliant, so the rain falls, so we are taking off our masks are we, &
Some days I feel that I exude a fine dust. Someone else's Leica sitting on the table sometimes. I think I am a tiny figure. Spain!

Much more beautiful than Egypt. Suddenly that body appears in my smoke. Summer is over. Suppose you really do, toward the end.

I take a break from translating the Complete Works of Tacitus into Estonian & go for a walk along the esplanade.

We are many miles from the sea. Probably sixty. It will be a long walk to the sea before I can walk beside it.

But then, I have never read Tacitus. I am learning Estonian to prepare myself for it. Then Tacitus. Then re-read him, with an English-Estonian dictionary beside me.

I am plagued by doubts. I know more Latin than Estonian. Perhaps it would be easier to translate directly from the original rather than put English in the middle.

It will be my life's work. My Life's Work. My meistararbeit. I am reading the histories of the Roman Empire & the people Tacitus wrote about before reading him. I am learning Estonian.

I am walking towards the water. Halfway along the way Tacitus joins me. We converse in Latin. It sounds like a bad Mass. Conjugations confuse the radar cameras which means we can speed if we want to. I wonder what Estonian sounds like.

Tacitus tells me. Turns out he has relatives in the Baltic with whom he has always kept in touch, whom he talks to regularly on the phone, & that any one of the Finno-Ugric branch of the Uralic family of languages sounds similar to the others. I do not believe him, not about the language but about his relatives.

He begins to recite a poem in Latin. Then he recites it in the original Estonian. He tells me it is included in Heinrici Chronicon Livoniae which he had a hand in translating. Then he starts talking to me in Estonian.

I run away from him. I am pulled over by the Highway Patrol. By the time they let me go with a caution Tacitus has disappeared.

I continue walking towards the sea. An hour or so after dawn I reach it. It calls to me in English, says "Enter me, walk towards the islands." I go in. As my head goes beneath the water it starts cajoling me in Latin. The sea sounds remarkably like Tacitus.

I walk on. Coral & seashells cut my feet. The sea bathes them & wraps them in bandages so I can continue. Eventually my reticence fades. We begin to become more open with one another.

We talk in Estonian.

I.

Give judgment without appeal... the consequence of which is, that mankind will soon understand Germans well enough, attend to their sermons, and observe... though I am convinced that Caesar's ghost never appeared to Brutus, yet I observe carefully what displeases or pleases you in others - and be reserve; these are the rudiments of a politician, the world must be yours... may hereafter compare it with other courts which you will see; should be much ashamed to be ignorant of that fact, as related by, as if they had not done, and that the sting were still to come.

II.

This experience can suggest, may probably not be useless to you... how many troops in the regiments of horse and dragoons and how many men in each? ...will more than pay you for your trouble; I do not regret the time that I shaved you, but not condescend to do anything else... I therefore advise his order to be touched: it is true, the church of Rome furnished people, every priest of every religion is either a public or a down to the Savoyard's raree-shows.

III.

TO THE GRACES! The different effects of the same things, said or done, advice is seldom welcome and those who want it the most always like it restrained, by a very little reflection but as it is generally connected these memoirs, most of which are printed in italics pray attend to, and whether it resides in the sovereign, or in consistories and synods... "du coeur!" ...if he had said, instead of "souvent, tresque toujours", I fear knowledge or judgment, yet it has its use in other respects for it some additional qualifications necessary, in the practical part of commonplace, insipid jokes, and insults upon the clergy.

IV.

These tricks afterward grow habitual to them... some put their fingers in other hand, many Protestant princes, under the pretense of extirpating acquainted with, will gradually smooth you up to the highest polish.... in marriage for he scrupled no means to obtain his ends all at once? ...I think that I can, eventually, answer that question, then, by the marriage of his son Philip, Archduke of Austria, with Jane, it to a state of health and vigor.

V.

Observe the difference there is on places of public worship, as I would have you go to all the different specimen of what I mean: own dominions or privileges, these views respectively, among the chiefs thus: If you consider my letters in their true light, as conveying to you virtues, than for avoiding their opposite vices; vice, in its true light, are not the common growth of this country... it is in your power to acquire questions, see likewise everything at the fair, from operas and plays, to supplant each other in the favor, of the squire, as any two courtiers singly by good historians, which are worth your reading - the revolutions and a puerile declaimer.
