

Twenty Aphorisms and Reflections by Rudy Spillman

"The human being intellectually better equipped, is certainly, who has a lesser degree of stupidity."

"There is no possibility to find out about ourselves and not be surprised."

"Sanity is the madness of majority."

"If humanity would assume itself there would be no need to pretend."

"To let others take from us is another way of giving."

"Who expects nothing from life, is almost having it all."

"The only way that I find not to believe in monsters, is to remain being a child."

"What money gives, its possession takes."

"The only war that should exist is that one we sort out with ourselves. If we could prevail, we would avoid all others."

"It's impossible to correct a mistake if one is not aware that it exists."

"The man looks like the fish. The big one always eats up the smaller one. The difference is that the fish makes it out of necessity to feed himself while men, do it to feed their needs."

"Wise men don't exist, only less ignorant."

"There is no more stable and lasting happiness than that one appearing when we discover that we are nothing."

"Everything is, what it's meant to be, after all our efforts to bring it out to become the way we want it to be."

"No matter how serious the issue that we face can be, if we spice it with a pinch of humor, it will always be more tasty and easy to digest."

"A dagger not only serves to injure and kill. It could also be used to cut the ties that will release us and others."

"It's more important the intention than its result."

"The man has a great adaptation power that only discovers when he is in the need to use it."

"When our success depends on the application of violence, the failure of our company for having waived, will provide our greatest success: peace of mind that gives us love, which will purify more with each renouncement we make for such reasons."

"We have arrived at a point in our history in which we despise the value of our lives to get our goals, without realizing that when life is gone, goals also disappear. They are gone with our lives."

The author apologizes for possible errors appearing in the text above regarding that English language is not his mother tongue.
