Pulling it all Together

I'm not sure I can write an article yet that really explains how everything relates to the Mayan Calendar; but suffice it to say that I understand now why there is such acceleration of consciousness throughout the globe.

Lately my life has been about pulling it all together - all the strange interests I have, experiences I've known, theories I've studied, and oddly enough the thing that draws it together best is taking a good look at the Mayan Calendar.

I'm sure I'm not the only one feeling this connectedness. I'll share my personal experiences, and I'm curious about other people's experiences with pulling it all together.

I only recently found Ian Xel Lungold's videos explaining the Mayan Calendar. I might have run across something of this before and dismissed it. The website is <http://www.mayanmajix.com/> The best, most easily understandable video for someone who totally didn't possess this knowledge was "The Mayan Calendar Comes North." I watched it online before purchasing the video. In fact, I've purchased all the videos now and am reproducing them to share (as there is no copyright). When I watched Ian explain this, I understood as he says, "We're on a schedule." It's quite clearly understandable.

Something that resonated truth to my soul was how everything else that's been happening makes sense in light of this understanding of the shift in consciousness. Most recently I was brought into an understanding of the law of attraction through the movie, "The Secret" and Esther Hicks recordings of Abraham on <http://www.abraham-hicks.com/> That might not seem so significant; but what I found was huge numbers of people getting on board with this enlightened view of the universe who would have never, ever accepted such strange philosophy except that everything pointed to the widespread opening of this way of thinking. These vast numbers of people all over the world came together with one new idea that sparked the comprehension that it is possible for us to become co-creators of our reality, and, thus, anything truly is possible. This is a quantum leap in thought for the majority of these everyday people like me who just don't normally embrace such paradigm shifts so readily. I found this to be a puzzling phenomenon until I watched the video explaining the Mayan Calendar. Then it made perfect sense. This global consciousness moved into the next step in evolution because this is the direction of consciousness at this time. It had to happen. Something was going to be the catalyst that moved all these people to step forward and get out of the bog of their old belief systems. So now there is this huge global community of people already practicing deliberate co-creation. How remarkable!

Prior to this experience, I had spent many years coming to terms with my personal paranormal experiences. In recent years I found my peace with these experiences, developed my own theories about certain aspects of the paranormal, and began helping other people to find their peace with their own experiences. During this process I studied to be a paranormal investigator because it was very important to me to understand the scientific techniques and equipment use; but I do not do paranormal investigations even though I did receive the certification. This process, though, has acquainted me with many paranormal investigators and ghost hunters. I found it quite curious that just a few years ago it would have sounded insane to announce to your friends or coworkers that you spent your spare time investigating paranormal phenomena. But in these past few years this sort of thing has become quite prevalent, even commonplace. People who, ten years ago were afraid to let anybody know they had an interest in the paranormal are openly sharing their experiences and not thought of as terribly odd or deranged. The accelerated pace of this phenomena had not gone unnoticed by me; but understanding that we are on a schedule makes it clear to me that this acceptance of things beyond what we consider "normal" had to happen in order for us to open our minds to greater possibilities. This change in consciousness facilitated the ultimate change to acceptance of new ideas, higher levels of thought.

For many years I've had an interest in natural healing. I've studied everything from herbs and aromatherapy to energy healing. I've studied philosophies, religions, ancient healing methods, and I could list for paragraphs the topics that caught my interest. This current change of consciousness has a focus on this earth as a living being. There is something drawing us to nature. All this history I have of investigating natural healing methods has served to open my mind to thoughts of connecting with nature. I'm not alone in this either. I've noticed over the last two decades increasing numbers of people throughout the globe turning to natural healing modalities. We have been following a path that leads us to Mother Earth. We have been unconsciously learning to connect with Gaia. We will need this connection for the next step.

My website and my life for many years have been devoted to holistic healing, spirituality, and preparedness. I've given many, many presentations on these topics. All that has been a dress rehearsal for what is happening now. It's all come together. We are on schedule.
